

2009 GC Compensation Survey

By: Vanessa Vidal

Historically, general counsels at the nation's largest companies enjoyed a certain amount of immunity from economic fluctuations. The past decade shows a nearly unbroken string of pay raises. Even through the previous recessions, these general counsels stayed largely untouched. However, according to a recent survey conducted by Corporate Counsel, it appears that this trend is no more. While some indexes of general counsel pay rose, compensation by in large remained nearly flat. Why? Because executive pay has become inextricably bound with corporate performance. If the company doesn't do well, the GC might find a thinner pay packet. How thin? It's all relative. Make no mistake, these top company general counsels are still handsomely compensated for their hard work, but there is a chink in the armor. General counsel at the nation's top companies earned $1.8 million in pay and bonuses last year, an increase of 2.6%.

Here is a 2009 GC Compensation Survey with a breakdown tallied by Corporate Counsel:

- Average salary was $596,393, an increase of 5%(↑)
- Average bonus was $1.16M, an increase of less than 1% (1)

Bonuses were a combination of bonuses not tied to performance goals and "nonequity incentive compensation" paid for making performance targets. "The world economy may be limping," reported Corporate Counsel. "Economic sectors like banking and manufacturing are still waiting for those green shoots to pop up, while the real estate market continues to search for the bottom. But last year the general counsel of the nation's largest companies still managed to get a modest raise. "Salary increases and generous bonuses generate great headlines. But that's not how most chief legal officers amassed their wealth over the years. One of the big attractions of being an in-house lawyer, in good times, at least, is the chance to own company stock. And that's held true even though the way companies distribute shares has changed dramatically.

At the same time, compensation tied to company shares fell:

- Average stock award was $1.1M, a decline of 18% (↓)
- Average option award was $669,719, a decline of 7% (↓)

Still, by the standards of a working population dealing with everything from mass layoffs to unpaid furloughs, top legal officers at Fortune 500 companies continued to earn a very decent living. Usually the top paid corporate lawyer is the chief legal officer of a thriving big conglomerate. In the 2008 survey, however, the best-compensated lawyer was Gregory Doody, a bankruptcy expert hired to lead the Calpine Corp. out of bankruptcy, Corporate Counsel reports in a separate story. He took home $9.7 million in cash and bonuses last year; he has since left the company. But those figures were tabulated last year. Will the overall picture for general counsels look bleaker in next year's survey? And will a sustained economic downturn in 2009 mean the end of $9 million bonuses, even for the general counsel of a thriving wireless telecommunications conglomerate? That remains to be seen
